

A Question Worth Thinking About: Surgical Gloves Donning Efficiency

How many surgeries are performed each week in a hospital? And how many times does a surgeon need to change gloves for performing a surgery?

The answer may vary, but it is for sure that surgeons shall wash and dry their hands before donning gloves. However, in many emergency situations surgeons would need to don the gloves while their hands are still damp. In doing so, gloves donning becomes a frustrating process for surgeons to experience every single time.

Mocare Health offers a wide selection of surgical gloves with damp-donning feature. This advanced technique allows surgeons to put on the gloves with ease whether their hands are dry or damp.

Normal surgical gloves

- Wait until hands are completely dry before donning
- Prone to use excessive strength to don the gloves while hands are damp, might tear the gloves and cost just another pair

v.s.

Surgical gloves featured with damp donning

Easy to don even with damp hands

In emergencies, every second counts. Damp donning is becoming an essential criterion in gloves selection.